What I said then was received more cordially by my auditors than it would have been in my native State of Massachusetts, though what I preached was the faith of the men who founded this great republic. What I say to-day should, in my judgment, be accepted wherever men are civilized, for it is the faith without which civilization cannot endure. I rejoice that the occasion which calls me here is the dedication of a new building for the teachers of law, for there never was a time in the history of the world when it was more important to teach the knowledge of and respect for the law....
