Excerpt: . . . has been used by the Wesleyans for their services since the year 1843, and is now much too small for their requirements. It occupies a prominent position in the High Street, near the Stone Bridge and on the north side of the river Cann, and is a very handsome structure which seems to harmonise well with the surroundings, its appearance from the Moulsham end of the town being particularly striking. Being so near the river, the foundations caused considerable difficulty, and necessitated its being built on broad beds of concrete, these continuing in some places to the level of the river bed. The design, by Messrs. Gordon, Lowther, and Gunton, of Finsbury House, E. C. , whose plans were selected from among those of nine competitors, is in the Perpendicular style of Gothic, with several late Decorated features. The material is red brick, with stone dressings and quoins. The main entrance faces the High Street, and is formed by a four-centred arch, over which is a large six-light mullioned window. A handsome octagonal tower flanks the main front on the north side, and forms the entrance to the church and galleries. The plan consists of nave and transepts, with a small chancel, or apse, for the choir and communion. There is also an organ chamber on the south, and ministers vestry on the north. The roof is well carved and timbered, and there are three galleries, the one at the west end over the...
